Academic Credit Internships with the Islamic Society of North America

Many universities around the U.S. provide academic credit for internships (between 3-6 credit hours on average). Undergraduate students applying to ISNA's Samina and Maqbool Ahmad Internship Program who have the option for academic credit are encouraged to seek authorization from their campus liaison. A campus liaison is the individual at your university who has been designated to oversee for-credit internships.

The liaison will need to approve your application and verify that you will receive credit for your participation in ISNA's program. In-depth program descriptions are available online at www.isna.net/internship. The liaison will indicate his/her approval by either signing the hard copy version of the ISNA application or, in the case of an online application, he/she will email ISNA that you have been approved to attend ISNA's program and receive academic credit.

If your school does not have a liaison, you will still need to secure the approval of a campus sponsor. You may want to contact your academic advisor, the director of internships or cooperative education, director of career services, associate dean or head of your department. The individual who serves as your campus sponsor will need to verify that you will receive credit for participating in ISNA's program. The sponsor will indicate his/her approval by either signing the hard copy version of the application or, in the case of an online application, he/she will email ISNA that you have been approved to attend ISNA's program for credit. ISNA, in turn, will submit evaluations and other necessary paperwork to the liaison or sponsor as required by your university.
