Improving our communication with Allah (SWT)

The success of our daily life highly depends on how we communicate with Allah (SWT). Understanding and applying the principles of effective communications in our acts of worship help us to lead and regulate our daily life in the most efficient ways. The essence of submitting to Allah and worshipping Allah through the five daily prayers, supplications, and Dhikr is to communicate with our creator and sustainer consistently, frequently, and effectively. This talk will elaborate on certain elements in communication terms that would improve the quality of our daily prayers (Salaat), our supplications (Du'a), and our Dhikr to attain the ideal and optimum level of communication.

Thinking Outside the Mosque: How Muslim Institutions Can Change America

It is a sign of maturity for any immigrant community when it moves beyond establishing places that meet its immediate needs—houses of worship, grocery stores for ethnic cuisine, travel agencies for trips back home, etc.—and begins to look to the intellectual, scholastic, and social service needs that will help sustain the community for the long term. Muslims in America are clearly past that point. With the waves of immigrant Muslims in the past fifty years, combined with convert and African American Muslims, our community has attained a critical mass that necessitates a focused effort at building institutions. Zaytuna Institute intends this program to be a wide-ranging discussion about the institutional priorities and needs of Muslims in America.

Service to the Community: Living the Spirit of Ramadan

One of the major goals of Ramadan is to instill, in a fasting person, a sense of compassion and concern for those less fortunate,. How can we translate that focus into concrete programs and actions that serve the community? How does our faith serve as a springboard for providing needed social service programs and help us encourage existing projects? How do we walk the walk rather than merely talking the talk? Those involved in service projects will help inform and inspire us to exemplify our compassion and concern in our communities.

Defending the Prophet Against Orientalist Critique

In light of the recent spate of attacks against the honor of our beloved Prophet (SAW), it is imperative that Muslims are aware not only of what is said, but, even more importantly, how to respond to such misinformation. How much of these slanders are pure fabrications? And how many have an element of truth but have been distorted or exaggerated? Even more profoundly, how does one understand and explain incidents that are indeed historically true, but are viewed in our times as being immoral or unethical? It is our goal to address a series of such incidents from the Seerah and explain the best methodology in defending the honor of our Prophet (SAW).

Speakers: Yaser Birjas, Yaser Farzaka, Yasir Qadhi
Moderator: Omar Zakariyyah

Muslims' Need for American Identity: Challenges, Reservations, Solutions

There are socio-psychological reasons for an integrated identity. Psychological research shows a high incidence of conflict and disorders in those who do not have such an identity, or have an identity that is fragmented. From a social perspective, each society has a powerful system that distributes its reward-punishment allocations based on its own scale of priorities. Muslims at present are pushed to the bottom for reasons very much related to this identity. These socio-psychological reasons have a compelling force to cause change automatically, albeit over generations. It is better for Muslims to choose and accept changes in a conscious and deliberate manner, rather than have them forced randomly upon them.

Mobilizing the Muslim Political Machine: Effective Strategies for Community-Based Political Advocacy

With the upcoming presidential election, the political importance of the Muslim community has increased dramatically. While voter turnout and registration is important, now is the time to increase Muslim American participation in the political system at the local, state, party and federal levels. The audience will be provided with tools to organize their community to be involved in all aspects of the political process, from establishing dialog and familiarity with elected officials, to becoming involved in the political party system, participating in the electoral process itself, and how to create political action committees that support candidates and bring a tangible return to their community.

Elected officials, including the only two Muslim members of the United States House of Representatives, the Hon. Keith Ellison and the Hon. Andre Carson, will discuss their own experiences as well as the efficacy of these strategies from the perspective of those in office.

Kashmir: Setting a Stage for the Final Settlement

While the international community upholds a position of principle with relation to the status of Kashmir, little has been done and the urgency of settling the dispute is getting scant multilateral recognition. As a result of this, no genuine negotiations have yet been held by the two involved governments of India and Pakistan to arrive at a just and lasting solution. Both are going through motions and holding parleys which turn out to be more a matter of pretence than substance. The panelists will explore various possibilities to set a stage for the settlement of the Kashmir dispute.

Practicing What we Preach

As Muslims, we would like the whole world to know that "Islam means peace. " While we have many mosques, Islamic schools, Islamic centers, and Muslim organizations involved in interfaith work, do we actually live according to Islamic tenets? We will share the secrets of American Muslim Voice's success locally, nationally and internationally, part of which is because we operate under Islamic tenets by being kind, caring and charitable, accepting and practicing nonviolence and peace, and protecting humanitarian values and human rights for all. We hope that our Muslim brothers and sisters will live Islam by getting involved in proactive peace-building. The desired outcome would change the negative image of Muslims and Islam to a positive one.

The Green Muslim Movement

As scientists gain a better understanding of the process of global warming, the possibility of major changes in our earth's climate has created an impetus to re-evaluate our relationship to the earth. As faith groups take the mantle of leadership in trying to be better stewards to the earth, Muslims cannot continue to remain silent on this issue. An environmental awareness is firmly rooted in our tradition through the Quran and Sunnah. The question for us is how to take these concepts and apply them in our lives. How does the idea of ayaat Allah (signs of God) around us help transform our personal relationship with nature? How do the concepts of 'adl and mizan keep us and our society in an equitable balance? Where does the concept of khilafa (stewardship) take us in terms of activism and awareness?

This session will bring together a diverse panel of speakers who have tried to answer these questions through their work. Presenters will share practical tips and advice from their experience with environmental activism. This session aims to inspire the audience to network and develop an eco-consciousness in their communities by taking action on behalf of the planet.

Muslim-Jewish Dialogue: Building Peaceful Society Here & Elsewhere

In 2007, ISNA launched The Children of Abraham Dialogue Guide, in partnership with the Union for Reform Judaism. This initiative, which focused on partnering mosques and synagogues throughout the country to study together the common principles of both faiths in hope of encouraging understanding and acceptance of each others faith traditions, is one of the major achievements of Muslim-Jewish relationships. Along with other partners of the Jewish faith, there is a dialogue to further promote similar avenues to achieve the common goal of understanding and acceptance. In this session panelists will discuss these partnerships and how they are fostering relationships amongst our two communities.

Islamic Schools: Working Together to Serve Muslim Children in North America

Islamic Schools are an organic and natural product of the phenomenal growth of the Muslim Community in North America. Over the past several decades, hundreds of schools sprang up across the country, working independently and in some cases cooperating with other schools regionally, to educate upcoming generations of Muslims in America. Over the years, there have been several efforts to bring the schools together to ensure success for all without duplication or waste of effort. The Council of Islamic Schools of North America (CISNA) has been leading efforts in this arena, and some members of the board will share the latest developments in the organization as well as general trends in Islamic education today.

Principles Governing Fiqh for Muslim Minorities

It is not the first time Muslims have existed as a minority in a non-Muslim region. Muslims in the past who found themselves a religious minority navigated the social, political, cultural and legal constructs of their peers to create an identity that would both coexist with their neighbors and be sincere to their faith. These Muslim communities utilized the basic principles of fiqh as they proceeded to create this identity. This session will examine some of these basic principles that help us make some of the decisions we are faced with daily on our own, while addressing some of the unique aspects of the Fiqh of Minorities with an emphasis on Muslims in America.

Prophetic Medicine: A Holistic Approach to Medicine

In the realm of health, hygiene, prevention and treatment of maladies, the Prophet employed both popular remedies of his time as well as spiritual remedies. The latter comprised of recitation of verses from the Holy Quran and duas or (nafl) prayers on various occasions. Thus, his was a true approach to problems of health. Prior to Islam, the spiritual aspects of cure were left to the priests and the treatment of the body was in the domain of physicians, surgeons, orthopedists and ophthalmologists. By combining the two, and blending these philosophies together, our Prophet can be considered one of the first ones to use a truly "holistic approach to the cure of disease". In this session, we will examine in some detail these combined aspects of "Prophetic Medicine" which can truly be considered a 'Holistic' approach to medicine.

Care of the Elderly In a Muslim Community

The US population is growing larger and older. American Muslims, who make up 6-8 million of America's population, also have a growing population of older Muslims. This is especially true of immigrant American Muslims. Currently there is no formal national program by any national Muslim organization to deal with issues affecting elderly American Muslims. The purpose of this presentation is to identify these concerns and offer some suggestions. IMANA, and its parent organization ISNA, are invited to take up this challenge.
